

The book was found

Mischka's War: A True Story Of Survival In Nazi Dresden

Synopsis

In 1943, 22-year-old Latvian Mischka Danos chanced on a terrible sight - a pit filled with the bodies of Jews killed by the occupying Germans. A few months later, escaping conscription into the Waffen-SS in Riga, Mischka entered Hitler's Reich itself on a student exchange to Germany. There, as the war drew to an end, he narrowly escaped death in the Allied fire-bombing of Dresden. As he made his escape from Hitler's Reich he fell ill and was incarcerated in hospital before finally reuniting with his resourceful mother Olga, who had made her own way out of Riga, saving some Jews along the way. The diaries, correspondence and later recollections of mother and son provide a vivid recreation of life in occupied Germany, where anxiety, fear and loss were tempered by friendship, and where the ineptitude of international and occupation bureaucracies added its own touch of black humour. Sponsored as immigrants by one of the Jews Olga had saved, they eventually reached New York in the early 1950s. As refugee experiences go, they were among the lucky ones—but even luck leaves scars. The author, who met and married Mischka forty years after these events, turns her skills as a historian and wry eye as a memoirist to telling this remarkable story.

Book Information

Hardcover: 320 pages

Publisher: I.B. Tauris & Co Ltd (September 26, 2017)

Language: English

ISBN-10: 1788310225

ISBN-13: 978-1788310222

Product Dimensions: 1.2 x 5.5 x 8.5 inches

Shipping Weight: 1.1 pounds (View shipping rates and policies)

Average Customer Review: 5.0 out of 5 stars 1 customer review

Best Sellers Rank: #549,807 in Books (See Top 100 in Books) #63 in Books > Biographies & Memoirs > Historical > Europe > Spain & Portugal #457 in Books > Biographies & Memoirs > Historical > Europe > Germany #1104 in Books > History > World > Jewish > Holocaust

Customer Reviews

Mischka Danos was able to make himself invisible if danger was in the offing, he could become totally still and unnoticeable, before silently melting away into the shadows. His third wife, the eminent historian of Soviet Russia, Sheila Fitzpatrick, witnessed it, twice, when they were confronted by muggers in the 1990s. She was amazed by how well it worked. But by then he was a past master at avoiding trouble. Danos, a theoretical physicist, was born in Riga in 1922. Latvia was a punchbag for warring peoples during the 1940s, but he escaped conscription into the Latvian, German and Russian armies, despite being eligible for call-up every time. At the end of the war when Latvia was absorbed into the Soviet Union, Danos was in Germany, in the American sector. Although technically a displaced person, he managed to secure a place (and comfortable digs) at Hanover University, and then at Heidelberg. His qualifications achieved, he married a German girl, set sail for New York and developed a successful career at several universities, being particularly remembered for his work on medical imaging devices. He died in 1999. A few years later, Fitzpatrick opened a box he'd left behind. It contained his own diaries, along with his mother's, all their long correspondence and many more documents and photographs. She could not resist trying to describe, to re-create even, the young man she never knew. To her surprise, however, the most important character of the resultant story proves to be Olga Danos, Mischka's long-dead mother. Endlessly resourceful, warm-hearted and generous, she managed to smuggle Jews out of the Riga ghetto, under cover of employing them under contract with the German army in her tailoring workshop. She cut seven years off her age to get to America, where she married a Japanese butler and settled in Florida. She really deserves a book of her own. As for Mischka, the central episode of his war began in the spring of 1944, when he decided, astonishingly, to move to Germany. He explained that he'd thought the war would soon be over and the Russians would return to Riga: he wanted to continue to study physics, and Germany was considered the best place for it. Besides, he'd have a chance of getting to the west when it was all over. And so it proved. But he chose to go to Dresden. It went well at first. The place was civilised, peaceful and beautiful. He even took a cheerful touring holiday around Germany in the winter of 1944-45. A slightly sour note is struck when Fitzpatrick mentions a letter, dated December 15 1944, from the Ministry for Armaments and War Production. It concerns his invention of "an acoustic pathfinding apparatus" and thanks Mischka for the "great interest he shows for the defence of the Third Reich". He later claimed to have systematically sought not to have helped the German war effort, but a question-mark hovers over that episode. Deciding it was time to leave Dresden, he held a farewell party in his lodgings on February 13 1945. His account of what followed, reproduced almost verbatim, is the central episode of this book: it is chilling, both in content and in the curious detachment of the narrator. The first sign of trouble is that the door, which had been closed, silently falls into the room. Pretty soon, his guests realise what is happening and disperse, but a girl he has invited lives the other side of town and he decides, reluctantly that he should see her home. They scramble to a hilltop and watch as the Allied bombing intensifies. As usual, the girl is anonymous and he the hero of the hour. “The sight is mesmerizing; I stand there hypnotized, a 20th-century Nero.” It becomes louder, hotter, closer, more terrifying. They hide in a shell hole, then take cover in a bunker. The next day they clamber over the steaming, smoking rubble of the city, confronted by unimaginable, unforgettable horrors and eventually get to her house, where he is fed and put to bed between clean sheets and “for him it is over. In her afterword, Fitzpatrick worries that her book might be a kind of betrayal: her researches have made even her critical of him, of his cavalier attitude to girls, his casual racial stereotyping, and what she calls his “loud silences” about the Jewish question and Nazism. She could be right. Sadly, the loveable older man she remembers is not discernible in these pages. Danos comes across as conceited, selfish and patronising, boasting that he is “uncategorizable.” He was never known to apologise. But his mother was terrific. (Sue Gaisford, Financial Times 2017-08-01)

Sheila Fitzpatrick is Emerita Professor of History at the University of Chicago and Honorary Professor of History at the University of Sydney. One of the most acclaimed historians of twentieth-century Russia, she is the author of several books, including The Russian Revolution; Stalin’s Peasants, Everyday Stalinism, Tear off the Masks! and A Spy in the Archive: A Memoir of Cold War Russia (I.B.Tauris, 2013).

In 1989, Sheila Fitzpatrick, an Australian historian, met Mischka Danos, a theoretical physicist originally from Latvia, on a plane. They met by chance, fell into conversation, then into love and married. They had ten years together: Mischka died in 1999. In this book, Ms Fitzpatrick pieces together Mischka’s life before she knew him, through diary entries, correspondence and recollections from others who knew him. It’s a way of remembering Mischka, of keeping him alive, of trying to understand his past. It also provides insights into the impact of World War II, on a family from the Baltic state of Latvia. In 1943, while skiing through the Latvian woods, Mischka Danos came across a pit filled with the bodies of Jews killed by the Germans. He was aged 22. Later, Mischka was to discover that he was part-Jewish. His father, Arpad, was a Hungarian Jew who had changed his name from Deutsch to Danos, around 1900. Did Mischka know this, I wondered, when he went on a student exchange to Germany to escape conscription into the Waffen-SS? Mischka narrowly escaped death in the fire-bombing of Dresden, became a Displaced Person in occupied Germany before finally being reunited with his mother Olga. Mischka became a member of the Heidelberg school of physics and then both he and Olga were resettled in the USA at the beginning of the 1950s. Around the biographical facts, Ms Fitzpatrick has provided the detail which brings both Mischka and Olga to life and provides the reader with the context for the choices made and the decisions taken. Sheila Fitzpatrick is Professor of History at the University of Sydney and Distinguished Service Professor Emerita of the University of Chicago. She has written several books about Soviet history, as well as two memoirs: My Father's Daughter (2010) and A Spy in the Archives (2013). I have added these memoirs to my reading list. Note: My thanks to NetGalley and Melbourne University Publishing for providing me with a free electronic copy of this book for review purposes. Jennifer Cameron-Smith

Download to continue reading...

Mischka's War: A True Story of Survival in Nazi Dresden Survival: Survival Guide: Survival Skills, Survival Tools, & Survival Tactics. Emergency Prepping, & Surviving A Disaster! (First Aid, Survival Skills, Emergency ... Medicine, Bushcraft, Home Defense Book 1) Dresden Files Roleplaying Game: Vol 1: Your Story (The Dresden Files Roleplaying Game) Dresden Files Roleplaying Game: Vol 2: Our World (The Dresden Files Roleplaying Game) One Step Ahead - A Mother of Seven Escaping Hitler's Claws: A True History - Jewish Women, Family Survival, Resistance and Defiance against the Nazi War Machine in World War II World War 2 Historyâ€¢ 10 Most Incredible Women: World War II True Accounts Of Remarkable Women Heroes (WWII history, WW2, War books, world war 2 books, war history, World war 2 women) The Nazi Hunters: How a Team of Spies and Survivors Captured the World's Most Notorious Nazi The Ultimate Survival Guide for Beginners: The Best Tactics And Tips To Survive Urban And Wilderness Disasters (Survival Guide, Survival for Beginners, Survival books) SURVIVAL: Survival Pantry: A Prepperâ€¢ Guide to Storing Food and Water (Survival Pantry, Canning and Preserving, Prepper's Pantry, Canning, Prepping for Survival) A Beginner's Urban Survival Prepping Guide: Basic Urban Self Defense Guide And Survival Tips in the Prepping Urban Environment(The Prepperâ€¢ Urban survival ... A Beginner's Urban Survival Prepping True Ghost Stories And Hauntings: Eerie True Paranormal Hauntings, Unexplained Phenomena And Disturbing True Ghost Stories (True Ghost Stories, Bizarre True Stories,) The results of bombing Frankfurt am Main in World War II: A special sightseeing tour on the basis of pre-war, post-war and actual photographs of the city ... Monuments Men came to Nazi-Germany Book 1) Voyage of the Damned: A Shocking True Story of Hope, Betrayal, and Nazi Terror The Lost Airman: A True Story of Escape from Nazi-Occupied France Agent Zigzag: A True Story of Nazi Espionage, Love, and Betrayal Hiding in Plain Sight: The Incredible True Story of a German-Jewish Teenager's Struggle to Survive in Nazi-Occupied Poland

Avenue of Spies: A True Story of Terror, Espionage, and One American Family's Heroic Resistance in Nazi-Occupied Paris Stranded in the Snow!: Eric LeMarque's Story of Survival (True Tales of Survival) Illustrated Battles of the Napoleonic Age-Volume 3: Badajoz, Canadians in the War of 1812, Ciudad Rodrigo, Retreat from Moscow, Queenston Heights, ... Shannon, Chrystler's Farm, Dresden and Lutzen Ghost Story: A Novel of the Dresden Files

Contact Us

DMCA

Privacy

FAQ & Help